Paternity allowance during the maternity or parental allowance period

- You can receive paternity allowance for 18 working days divided between as many as 4 periods that coincide with Kela paying the mother of the child maternity or parental allowance. Apply for paternity allowance also for the period of paternity leave with pay.

If more than one child is born to your family at the same time or more than one child is adopted at the same time, you are entitled to an extended paternity allowance period. The extension of the paternity allowance period can be used during the maternity allowance or parental allowance period or after the parental allowance period. The extended period does not affect the number of periods. More information is available at www.kela.fi/web/en/multiple-birth-families.

- For the following period:

Paternity allowance after the parental allowance period

- You can receive paternity allowance for 54 working days in up to 2 periods after the parental allowance period. If you received paternity allowance during the maternity and parental allowance period, the remaining number of days for which you can receive paternity allowance is equal to 54 days minus the number of days you have already used. Apply for paternity allowance also for the period of paternity leave with pay.

When Kela pays paternity allowance, neither of the parents can at the same time receive child home care allowance or private day care allowance for the same child. Kela checks if you are entitled to child home care allowance or private day care allowance for the period for which you are applying for paternity allowance.

Although the right to day care placement is retained, the child may not actually be placed in day care during the paternity allowance period. The eligibility for the paternity allowance must be used before the date when the child reaches the age of two or before two years have passed since the child was adopted.

If more than one child is born to your family at the same time or more than one child is adopted at the same time, you are entitled to an extended paternity allowance period. The extension of the paternity allowance period can be used during the maternity allowance or parental allowance period or after the parental allowance period. The extended period does not affect the number of periods. More information is available at www.kela.fi/web/en/multiple-birth-families.

- For the following period:

Parental allowance

- Subject to agreement between the parents, parental allowance can be paid to either parent. If the parents choose to split the parental allowance, both can take a parental leave in up to 2 separate periods.

If you are applying for the extension for multiple-birth families, please indicate at section 10 Additional information whether you and your spouse/partner intend to take a parental leave at the same time.

- For the full parental leave period

- For the following period:

_____ - _____ , _____ - _____

- Partial parental allowance for the following period: _____ - _____

- Adoption grant (in the case of international adoption)

Child benefit

- You are entitled to a single-parent supplement if you are not married or cohabiting or if you and your spouse/partner are legally separated.

- Child benefit

- Single-parent supplement to the child benefit, starting _____

7. Other income

i Receiving other benefits may affect the amount of parental benefits.

Also report benefits from other countries.

Do you receive pension payments from a source other than Kela for the period for which you are applying for paternity or parental allowance?

No

Yes; indicate the payer and the type of pension.

Do you or does your spouse/partner receive benefits from other countries, for instance pension, parental allowance or a benefit comparable to the child benefit?

No

Yes; state the country, the institution paying the benefit, the benefit and the amount of the benefit. Attach details about the benefit paid from another country than Finland (e.g. the decision in which you were granted the benefit).

8. Information affecting the amount of maternity, paternity or parental allowance

i The allowance for parents is calculated on the basis of your annual income. Annual income means your incomes during a period of 12 calendar months. This period is called the reference period. There is, however, a 1 month gap between the start of the allowance period and the reference period, and the income during this month is not taken into account.

Kela receives information on incomes from the national incomes register, the pension providers and the benefit payers. We ask for further information on your incomes on this form.

If the most favourable outcome for you is achieved by calculating the allowance on the basis of the earnings or annual income used to calculate a previous allowance for parents paid to you, Kela will do so automatically.

Read more at www.kela.fi/web/en/parental-allowances-amount-and-payment.

While you are receiving the allowance, are you also receiving an informal caregiver fee or a family caregiver fee?

- No
- Yes; for the time being.

- No
- Yes. Enclose a copy of the decision sent to you by Mela in which you were granted sickness allowance.

Did you during the reference period receive earnings-related unemployment allowance from an unemployment fund?

- No
- Yes, I have applied for or received earnings-related unemployment allowance for the following period:

i If you have received earnings-related unemployment allowance in several periods, for instance due to temporary lay-off, please indicate the periods under Additional information.

The annual income that the allowance for parents is based on may be calculated on the basis of the income for the last three calendar months of the reference period. One requirement is that the income for the last three calendar months, multiplied by four, is at least 20% higher than the annual income calculated on the basis of the full 12 calendar months. A further requirement is that you during the reference period have

- | | |
|---|--|
