8. Information affecting the amount of maternity, paternity or parental allowance

i The allowance for parents is calculated on the basis of your annual income. Annual income means your incomes during a period of 12 calendar months. This period is called the reference period. There is, however, a 1 month gap between the start of the allowance period and the reference period, and the income during this month is not taken into account.

Kela receives information on incomes from the national incomes register, the pension providers and the benefit payers. We ask for further information on your incomes on this form.

If the most favourable outcome for you is achieved by calculating the allowance on the basis of the earnings or annual income used to calculate a previous allowance for parents paid to you, Kela will do so automatically.
